

The Case Viability Score™, explained

CASE VIABILITY SCORE™

Every Attorney Case Brief™ ends with a single score, from 0 to 100. It summarizes how the medical records support a potential claim — strengths, weaknesses, and missing records weighed together — so you can judge the case before you invest in it.

Each score falls into one of five bands:

Score	Band	What it means
85–100	Strong pursuit	The records strongly support the claim.
70–84	Further investigation	Promising, with specific gaps identified that are worth closing first.
55–69	Mixed	Real strengths alongside real vulnerabilities.
40–54	Significant risks	Material obstacles weigh against the claim as it currently stands.
0–39	Decline recommended	The records do not support the claim at this stage.

From score to next step

The score never stands alone. Every Brief pairs it with a recommended next action: pursue, investigate further, pause for records, or decline. That recommendation points at the evidence itself — what the records support, what they don't, and what is missing from them.

What the score is — and is not

The score is a screening judgment based on the records you provide. It is not a legal conclusion, and the Brief does not replace a comprehensive review or your own legal judgment. Its purpose is narrower and more useful: to show you, early, what the evidence actually supports before the case takes your time, expert fees, and attention.

Want to see the score in context? The complete sample Brief — built on a fictional sepsis case — shows how the score, the findings behind it, and the recommended next action fit together.
